Rita is a law student at Osgoode Hall Law School with a growing interest in securities regulation, capital markets, and regulatory compliance. She has experience working as a caseworker at a securities law clinic and as a research assistant in securities regulation. With strong analytical skills and a disciplined, detail-oriented approach to legal work, Rita is eager to continue learning and developing her practice. She is particularly curious about the evolving relationship between law, finance, and policy—and remains open to exploring a variety of practice areas as she builds her legal career.
