Maeve's practice is focused on administrative, environmental, regulatory and Aboriginal law issues that affect infrastructure, energy and natural resource development projects.

She has represented clients before the Federal Court and the Canada Energy Regulator, and has assisted with matters before the Federal Court of Appeal, the Alberta Court of Appeal, and numerous regulatory authorities including the Impact Assessment Agency of Canada, the Canadian Nuclear Safety Commission, the Alberta Energy Regulator, the Alberta Utilities Commission, the BC Energy Regulator, the BC Utilities Commission, and the Mackenzie Valley Environmental Impact Review Board. Maeve has advised industry, government and individual clients and regularly writes on emerging topics of interest in administrative, Aboriginal and Indigenous law.

Maeve studied law at the University of Victoria where she completed terms at The Law Centre legal clinic and at The Environmental Law Clinic. As a co-op student, Maeve worked at Osler, at an independent office of the Yukon legislature, and at an Aboriginal law firm in British Columbia.
