Ted has a broad technology-related practice and possesses both technology-commercial and technology-M&A expertise. Ted advises clients across a broad range of industries (e.g. investment companies, financial institutions, insurance companies, energy companies, medical device manufacturing companies, security software development companies, and securities dealers), bringing a depth of perspective that others cannot provide.

Ted advises large financial institutions, insurance companies, and energy companies, as well as mid-size technology companies, on complex outsourcing and strategic corporate and commercial matters, including advising such clients on infrastructure, application development, rewards program, data processing, and payment processing related services and transactions. Ted’s practice also focuses on advising emerging companies on corporate and commercial matters, including acting for such clients on M&A and financing transactions. Ted also routinely advises clients on privacy, intellectual property, and data access and management related issues, as well as contract structures for innovative arrangements.
